Questions 16–20

When a school announced that it would replace several printed notices with a digital information board, some students immediately welcomed the change. They argued that important announcements would be easier to update and less paper would be wasted. Others, however, were less enthusiastic. They pointed out that students who did not regularly check the board might miss important information.

After listening to both groups, the school decided not to choose one method completely over the other. Instead, major announcements were displayed digitally, while urgent information was also communicated through teachers and classroom notices.

Several months later, the school found that fewer students were missing important announcements. The change succeeded not because technology replaced the old system, but because different methods were used to solve different problems.

16. Why were some students concerned about the digital information board?

1. It was too expensive for the school.
2. It would use too much paper.
3. Some students might fail to check it regularly.
4. Teachers were unable to operate it.

17. Why did the school decide to use more than one method of communication?

1. The school could not afford a digital board.
2. Both methods had advantages in different situations.
3. Students refused to use technology.
4. Printed notices were more modern than digital ones.

18. What can be inferred about the school's decision-making process?

1. The school made its decision without considering students' opinions.
2. The school believed that one solution should solve every problem.
3. The school changed its policy because teachers demanded it.
4. The school considered different viewpoints before making a decision.

19. What does the phrase "not because technology replaced the old system" suggest?

1. Technology was completely unsuccessful.
2. The old system was better than technology.
3. Students preferred traditional methods in every situation.
4. Success came from combining appropriate methods rather than simply replacing one with another.

20. Which statement BEST expresses the main lesson of the passage?

1. New technology should always replace traditional methods.
2. The most effective solution may involve combining different approaches.
3. Schools should avoid changing their communication systems.
4. Students should be responsible for all school announcements.
