Questions 13–16

Read the passage carefully.

For many years, productivity was commonly measured by the amount of time people spent working. However, recent discussions have challenged this assumption. Spending longer hours on a task does not necessarily mean producing better results. In fact, excessive working hours may reduce concentration, increase errors, and eventually decrease overall efficiency. Consequently, some organizations have begun to focus not on how long employees work, but on what they accomplish during their working hours.

13. What is the main idea of the passage?

1. Employees should always work fewer hours.
2. Productivity should be evaluated only by the number of completed tasks.
3. Long working hours do not necessarily result in greater productivity.
4. Organizations should completely eliminate traditional working schedules.

14. According to the passage, excessive working hours may lead to all of the following EXCEPT:

1. reduced concentration
2. increased errors
3. decreased efficiency
4. improved creativity

15. The word “Consequently” is closest in meaning to:

1. However
2. As a result
3. For example
4. In contrast

16. Which statement can reasonably be inferred from the passage?

1. Measuring productivity requires consideration of results, not merely time spent.
2. All organizations have already adopted shorter working hours.
3. Working long hours always causes employees to fail.
4. Employees should be allowed to choose their own salaries.

Questions 17–20

Read the passage carefully.

People often assume that having access to more information automatically leads to better decisions. Yet information itself does not guarantee understanding. When individuals are presented with an overwhelming amount of data, they may struggle to distinguish reliable evidence from misleading claims. Moreover, people sometimes seek information that confirms what they already believe while ignoring evidence that challenges their views. Therefore, developing the ability to evaluate sources critically may be more valuable than simply increasing the amount of information available.

17. Which statement best summarizes the passage?

1. More information always leads to more intelligent decisions.
2. Access to information is useless unless people agree with it.
3. Critical evaluation of information is essential for making sound decisions.
4. People should avoid reading information that challenges their beliefs.

18. The phrase “confirms what they already believe” refers to the tendency to:

1. search for evidence supporting existing beliefs
2. change opinions immediately
3. avoid all forms of information
4. trust only scientific research

19. Which of the following would the author most likely agree with?

1. The quantity of information is always more important than its quality.
2. People should develop skills for evaluating the reliability of information.
3. Reliable information is impossible to identify.
4. The internet should contain less information.

20. Which situation best illustrates the problem discussed in the passage?

1. A student compares several reliable sources before writing a report.
2. A researcher changes a conclusion after discovering stronger evidence.
3. A person shares an article immediately because its headline supports his existing opinion without checking whether the source is trustworthy.
4. A librarian organizes books according to their subjects.
